Part 6: Read the following text and fill in the blanks with the correct past simple form of the verbs provided in parentheses.

The Day of a Software Technician

Last Monday, Sarah, a software technician, woke (wake) up early because she knew (know) she had a busy day ahead. She went (go) to the office and immediately began (begin) working on a critical project.

First, she ran (run) a series of tests on the new software update. To her surprise, the system broke (break) down during the final test. She thought (think) quickly and found (find) the source of the problem. It took (take) her a couple of hours, but she finally fixed (fix) the issue.

Next, Sarah met (meet) with her team to discuss the project's progress. They spoke (speak) about the upcoming deadlines and planned (plan) their tasks for the week. One of her colleagues brought (bring) up a potential bug in the code they wrote (write) the previous day. Sarah led (lead) the team in brainstorming solutions, and they came (come) up with a plan to address it.

During lunch, Sarah saw (see) an email from a client who bought (buy) their software last month. The client had (have) some questions about the installation process. Sarah wrote (write) a detailed response and sent (send) it right away.

In the afternoon, Sarah took (take) a break and went (go) for a walk outside. When she returned (return) to her desk, she noticed (notice) that the system crashed (crash) again. This time, she got (get) her senior technician involved. Together, they ran (run) more diagnostics and discovered (discover) a hidden flaw in the code. They spent (spend) the rest of the day fixing it.

By the end of the day, Sarah felt (feel) exhausted but accomplished. She left (leave) the office knowing that they made (make) significant progress and improved (improve) the software's reliability.
